

Climate Law in Australia CONFERENCE

12 & 13 April 2007

National Museum of Australia
Canberra

Climate Law in Australia is the first Australian conference to focus exclusively on the emerging legal dimensions of global warming.

While climate change presents great environmental, economic, social and technological challenges, it also presents novel legal problems.

This two day conference will explore vital legal issues that Australia needs to confront.

Leading academics, policy analysts and climate change lawyers will examine the international framework of Kyoto and the Asia-Pacific Partnership, the operation of Commonwealth and State laws and key climate cases which have already been before Australia's courts and tribunals.

Carbon trading, nuclear decision-making, alternative energy technologies and legal challenges to the coal industry will be major themes of the conference.

*This conference is jointly organised by
ANU College of Law and University of Melbourne, School of Social and Environmental Enquiry*
